About Hookah

The Hookah, (also known as the water pipe, nargella/arghileh, sisha, kalyan, ghelyoon or ghalyan, or hubble bubble) a traditional device for smoking, is said to have originated over a thousand years ago in India.

It operates by water-filtration and indirect heat. The original design, believed by most to have come from India or Persia, was primitively made from coconut shell and reeds. The coconut milk was originally used to filter the Hookah smoke, via two holes bored into the shell.

Later, with the smoking of herbs becoming more widespread, someone eventually adapted the common pipe to cool and purify the smoke by running it through water. This new method would prove to withstand the tests of travel and time and would allow for a more pleasurable smoking experience than with it's predecessor.
